Research interests

I investigate how pharmacogenetic testing translates into improved clinical outcomes by linking large-scale registry data with prospective clinical interventions. My research focuses on cardiovascular pharmacogenetics, CYP2C19-guided antiplatelet therapy, and therapeutic drug monitoring. Central projects include the SAMSON-2 trial, a multicenter randomized N-of-1 trial investigating statin intolerance, and the TDM-VISION project, which evaluates therapeutic drug monitoring for targeted agents such as ibrutinib and venetoclax in patients with chronic lymphocytic leukemia. My work employs methods ranging from register-based epidemiology and Mendelian randomization to randomized clinical trial design.
